Textbook: Phillips, William H. Film: An Introduction, fourth Edition, 2009.

The moving image is an ever-increasing presence in our lives. Technology has broken down the barriers of production and exhibition. Understanding the cinematic art is now more important than ever. This course teaches students the fundamentals of film form allowing students to better understand, analyze and create films. The course approaches a variety of film types through historical, economic, aesthetic and social contexts in order to build a student's general knowledge about films and filmmaking.

Grading and Assignments

The course is out of 100 points and the total will correlate with to a standard academic grading scale. (A=93, A-=90, B+=87, B=83, B-=80)

Attendance and Participation: 10 points

Attendance is mandatory for all scheduled classes and screenings. Attendance will be taken at all class meetings. I allow one absence, but any additional unexcused absences will reduce your attendance grade one point. Excused absences are allowed for medical, legal or religious reasons.

Weekly Responses: 15 points

Students need to send an e-mail response about each screening. Each response is due by noon on Friday after each screening. The responses should be about how the film connects with the weekly topic and readings and use relevant examples.

Introductory paper: 5 points

A three page paper on a film of your choice. The paper should include a summary and an analysis of an important scene of your choosing.

Final Paper: 20 points

The term paper is five to seven pages on a film of your choice. This paper must be thesis oriented with a strong argument and effective examples.

Midterm Exam and Final Exam: 25 points each

My grading will use the +/- system on the final grade for accuracy. Late work will not be accepted, unless you provide a letter of explanation from Oxford faculty and/or administration.

Citations and Plagiarism: In terms of film studies, common knowledge extends to basic information about a film, including its year, director and cast. However, any plot summary of a film is the unique work of the author and needs citation. Using Internet sources in responses without citation will count as plagiarism. This includes descriptive phrases and information beyond the scope of in-class lectures. Using sources without citation in responses or papers will lead to failure of the assignment and may necessitate an incident report to the Honor Council.

Electronic Device Policy: Use of Laptops, tablets and smart phones is not permitted during lectures or screenings. Cell phones must be silenced during lectures and screenings. Checking of messages and texting is not permitted. All headphones, ear buds and Bluetooth headsets must be removed. Failure to respect these policies will lead to a point loss on your attendance and participation grade of up to five points.

Please Note that this course will show films, stills and clips that include nudity, explicit sexuality, vulgar language, and graphic violence that some students may find troubling. Your enrollment in this course indicates your awareness of this and your willingness to approach these films and/or images in an adult, critical manner.
