CL102 (Classical Mythology) surveys some of most famous literary products of Classical Antiquity and the ways in which they were read and used over the centuries, from Plato and Aristotle to twenty-first century critical theorists. Special attention will be paid to the ways in which the following topics develop in western literature: imitation in art, the definition and social function of heroes, the political use of myth, and gender roles.

Your Tasks

1. Reading all text assignments before class. By “reading” I mean not only reading all of the words on the pages but also underlining important passages, making marginal notes in the texts themselves, and/or taking notes on index cards or in a notebook. Think of this as “active reading.” By reviewing your notes before class you can more effectively participate in class discussion.

2. Participating actively in class discussions (you can do this only if you have read actively beforehand).
3. Preparing two short presentations.
4. Writing three short papers and one long paper.
5. Taking a midterm and a final exam. These exams will involve identifying names and passages from your reading and answering essay questions.

Attendance policy

I expect you to attend every class. More than three unexcused absences will lower your final grade by one percentage point for every class you miss.

Grading Policy

Participation in Class Discussions	25%
Papers	30%
Midterm Exam	15%
Final Exam	30%

Required Text:

Ovid, Metamorphoses, trans. R. Humphries

Threshold of Democracy: Athens in 403 B.C., Mark C. Carnes

The Republic (Basic Books), Plato, trans. by Allan Bloom
