Course Description and Objectives

This course introduces some of the world's major religious traditions through the study of their sacred texts, also referred to as "scripture(s)," and provides intellectual and scholarly frameworks for reading them. The study of sacred texts is important because it opens a window onto the specific socio-historical circumstances that shape canons and the interpreted meanings of text and tradition that people of the world's religions hold as sacred and true. Moreover, the sacred texts of the world's religions are formative influences on ideas about the divine and ultimate reality, humankind, and the cosmos, as well as understandings of ethics, family, history, and nationhood, in all cultures. Sacred oral traditions and texts contain familiar and famous religious narratives, myths, cosmogonies, alongside laws and ethical codes that shape religious worldviews and practices.

Central to all our considerations will be the question of what constitutes a sacred text (or: scripture). We will study a wide selection of sacred texts from Hindu, Buddhist, Zoroastrian, Judaic, Christian and Islamic traditions, including first-order texts which are often considered most sacred by practitioners as well as many second-order commentaries upon them, both canonical and non-canonical. The question of what is considered part of a tradition's canon of sacred texts is itself highly contentious, as canonical content can be interpreted in many different ways. We will examine from an academic perspective the functions, uses, forms and definitions of "canon" and the sacred texts contained therein, as well as explore some main interpretational methods and hermeneutical strategies employed in the histories of religions and popularly today. Tracing the processes by which these texts came to be formed, analyzing their narrative structures, and recognizing the diversity of ways in which texts are used and interpreted are all aims of the course. Thus, the course will provide an intellectual and scholarly framework for reading sacred texts, introduce the major scriptural traditions of the world and some of the myriad of hermeneutical approaches to sacred text, while cultivating reading and writing skills, as well as critical-analytical abilities, particularly in the encounter with sacred canon.

In short, the goals and objectives for you as a student enrolled in this course are:

- to familiarize yourself with some of the world's major religious traditions through the study of their sacred texts,
- to understand the importance and diversity of sacred texts in the world's religious traditions,
- to question the very categories of "sacred text," "scripture," and "canon" as universal and cross-cultural concepts,
- to identify possible cultural biases in the above terms
- to achieve a de-centered, new understanding of what "sacred text"/"scripture" means, and, of course,
- to further develop your critical skills as a thinker, reader, writer, and speaker within and beyond the academic study of religion.

Required Readings

Course textbooks: 1. Fieser, James and John Powers. Scriptures of the World's Religions, second edition. (New York: McGraw Hill, 2004). This is a selection of sacred scriptures from the world's major religious traditions, including first-order and second-order religious texts and basic introductions to the religions themselves. 2. Coward, Harold. Scripture in World Religions, (Maryknoll, NY: Oneworld, 2000). This is a collection of diverse chapters on forms, structures, authorities and interpretations of religious texts. The textbooks are available in the campus bookstore.

Additional readings: Other required readings, including articles, alternate translations of sacred scriptures, and selections from contemporary theologians and exegetes, will be made available either as hardcopy or electronically online.

Online Tools

This course will use the online communication tools on LearnLink (LL) as well as readings and documents located there. To use LL you only need to have a LL email account. The LL Conference for our class can be found under the class conferences; you should move the LL Conference to your desktop so you do not miss any important information. Also, you would do well to get acquainted with some of the LL features and use LL as a frequent point of entry and exploration around many of the issues we will be discussing.

Requirements and Grading

You do not need to have any prior experience with the academic study of religion to take this class. However, we do expect you to work hard, and to contribute to class discussions. If you are not comfortable with the expectations for reading and writing in this class, you should consider taking another class instead. While we will lecture for part of the class almost every day, it will be conducted much more on a seminar model of examining your informed responses to the reading material. You are expected to keep up with all reading assignments. All readings are due at the beginning of each week unless noted otherwise. The readings are engaging and heavy. If you have not done the readings, it will simply be impossible for you to participate in the discussion. While we will suffer from that, the main damage will be done to your own learning and your participation grade. This equally applies to the amount of writing expected of you. Your final grade will be calculated according to the following:

Attendance and Participation (including Student Minutes and Presentations)	10%
Ten (10) Reflective Journal Entries	10%
Test I	20%
Test II	20%
Test III (Final Exam)	20%
Research Paper	20%

(Grading Scale: A, B, C, D, F. Plus and minus grades may be given on individual assignments and final grades.)

Attendance and Participation including Student Notes and Presentation

Attendance: You must be present for class meetings in order to do well in the course. Assigned readings will be supplemented by in-class lectures, discussions, exercises, and more. You are allowed to be absent from a total of three (3) class sessions. With every additional absence your final grade for this class will go down 5%. This means you will have to plan ahead with your allowance of three absences. Talk to either of us ahead of time, if you foresee any difficulties for yourself with this policy.

If a disability requires special circumstances for you in the classroom, taking notes, or taking tests or exams, please see Disability Services on campus for proper aid. Those students needing help with writing, English, or research, please go to the Writing Center run by Dr. Adrian Ivey or the ESL program headed by Dr. Stacy Bell.

Participation: Class participation is part of the learning process. As it is also part of the final grade there will be ample opportunity for it over the course of the semester. Apart from our lectures you will be involved in activities such as class discussion, group work with subsequent presentations, peer reviews and in-class writing. We expect you to keep up with all readings and assignments and to get the notes for missed class sessions from your peers. While we will call on you often and ask about the content of assigned readings you are strongly encouraged to ask questions and suggest topics for discussion in class on your own.

Student Minutes and Presentation: Taking notes on lectures and class discussion is a critical part of your learning experience. You are all expected to take notes during class as you will have to draw on them for your own work as well as when preparing for the tests. Your notes will also be the basis for a brief five-minute presentation that each of you is to give in class as part of your participation grade. Every day our meetings will start with one of you presenting on the previous class session. Here you will draw on your minutes/notes to give a brief summary of the main points discussed in the previous class as well as an outlook on unresolved issues and open questions which need further address. Be concise as you only have five minutes of talking time. Your peers will have a chance to comment on the accuracy of your notes and presentation and make suggestions for improvement. We will circulate a list with available dates for presentations at the beginning of the semester.

Ten Reflective Journal Entries

For this class you are asked to write a total of ten (10) reflective journal entries in which you respond to the reading assignments. Each Tuesday you may turn in a journal entry for that week's assigned readings. These entries are meant as free reflection opportunities and provide you with an outlet for your thoughts pertaining to the topics raised in the readings. They might contain your reflections on an idea, issue, question, or problem that became important for you in the readings assigned. The journal entries are designed to keep you engaged with the material, to help you practice writing, to develop some ideas informally, and to have a log of your thoughts at this state in your academic career. The contents of the journal entries will be private, and there will be no penalty for "controversial" opinions. You are free to explore a variety of writing styles and voices. We are interested in your reactions to the subject matter and not in your ability to adopt another's view. The entries are thus informal in the sense that they are exploratory. You do not have to arrive at some finished view or conclusion. However, they must be thoughtful, mature, and informed and will be graded based upon evidence of understanding and sensitive, informed level of engagement with the material. We will increasingly look for your ability to connect your response to the readings with class discussion and with what you encounter through other sources outside the classroom. Please keep a bound folder of loose-leaf paper as your personal journal.

Three Tests

There will be three tests over the course of the semester. The tests will cover both the reading assignments and in-class material given. Each test will consist of two parts, a short identification section and an essay section. Choices of questions will be provided. The first test (Thu 9/21) will cover the material from the introductory sessions up to and including our discussion of Hindu traditions. For the second test (Thu 10/26) you will be expected to demonstrate your knowledge of Buddhist, Zoroastrian and Jewish textual traditions. The third and last test will be given during exam week at the end of the semester. The test is cumulative. In preparation for it you will have to look back at the entire semester and reflect on the material, including Christian and Islamic texts, in a synthetic and comparative manner. The final exam is scheduled for Wednesday, December 20 (9:00-noon).The time of the final may not be changed.

Research Paper

You are free to choose a topic important or of interest to them, as well as a religious tradition and selection or selections from sacred text with which to explore the topic. The paper should exhibit your applied knowledge of approaches, hermeneutical or exegetical strategies, and intellectual grasp of the material at hand. Any topic, tradition, or text relating to our course is permissible.

Your research paper should be 3,000-3,600 words. This approximately corresponds to 10-12 pages (12 pt TNR, double-spaced, one-inch margins). The final draft of your research paper is due on Tuesday, December 12. Late papers will be penalized. Please note that plagiarism is easy to spot, and harshly penalized by the University. Don't be afraid to trust your own words and scholarly analyses.

A research paper is a focused analysis of material obtained from any of a number of different sources (course books, other academic books and monographs, the Internet, magazines, newspapers, personal interviews). The paper must not merely summarize the position maintained by another, but present your own argument, scholarly opinions and reflections. Your argument must be amply supported by the data reviewed. This paper should be carefully structured and presented. The paper must include a title page, endnotes or footnotes and a bibliography. Papers that explore interpretational methods and hermeneutical strategies employed popularly today, partly in relation to current issues in world religions such as gender roles, the status of women, social justice, economic justice, sexuality, violence and conflict resolution, ecology, or religion and science, are welcome. Of greatest importance is that you choose a topic that interests you.

Think of the research paper project in stages: choose a topic, compile a bibliography, engage in your research, compose an outline, write an initial draft, present your ideas before your peers, use peer reviews and feedback to revise your draft, and turn in your paper's final version. In order to facilitate the research process, there are three distinct activities and deadlines that you should meet. First, you should see one of us for approval of your topic and for help in finding sources before the fall break (see course schedule). Note: You must have cleared your topic with one of us by Thursday, October 5. Second, around the middle of the semester you will write a progress report on your research to-date. It will provide a snapshot of your work and should include a brief description (no more than 300 words) of your research topic, interesting findings so far, as well as any difficulties you have encountered. In addition, please also attach a bibliography of the works you are using in your research. Your progress report is due on Thursday, November 2. Finally, you will work in assigned groups in the 14th week of the course to critique each others' papers in helpful, constructive peer reviews. Turn in a first draft of your research paper, photocopied for your peer group, on Thursday, November 30 in class. On Tuesday, December 5 in class, we will exchange thoughts and suggestions for improvement of the papers in order to allow you to revise your paper before turning in a final draft on Tuesday, December 12. Please refer to the peer review handout for guidelines on constructive critiques. Your professors will take part as much as possible in each group.

Academic Honesty

Finally, all students deserve an atmosphere of fairness, honesty and maturity. All of us at Oxford College live by the standards set forth in the Honor Code, which includes the "responsibility for maintaining standards of unimpeachable honesty in all academic work." The Honor Code also indicates that we cannot tolerate actions in others that violate this code, so we (and you) are obligated to report violations. Oxford College takes this honor code very seriously, as do we, and penalties for violations are severe. Please read the Honor Code carefully; we trust you to conduct yourselves accordingly.
